PERSPECTIVES

Human Trafficking: How Sex and Labor Exploitation Is Being Addressed in Maine

Maine Public Radio - October 28th

"If I tried to leave I was put in a situation where I was threatened with my life and kids were threatened. It becomes really, really dangerous. I was sold out for sex on a regular basis. I was sexually assault over and over by the people who were trafficking me as well....It becomes this situation where you are terrified to go anywhere."

Maine Voices: Initiative focuses on those in grip of trafficking, hidden in plain sight

Portland Press Herald - November 12th

"It may be shocking to learn that Maine is home to people in the grip of human trafficking. But they are here hidden in plain sight: transgender and cisgender women, men and children forced – by sexual, physical and psychological coercion or violence – to do all kinds of work including sex work, restaurant and hospitality work, farm labor and domestic service. Often working alongside others who aren't being trafficked, they are victims of illegal labor practices, with little or no pay and unsafe working conditions."

NEWS

Hate-Crime Violence Hits 16-Year High, F.B.I. Reports

New York Times - November 12th

"Robert McCaw, the group's director of governmental affairs, said that while awareness and reporting of hate crimes have improved, daily acts of bullying or discriminations in schools, workplaces and in public are not included in the F.B.I.'s analysis, which focused on violent crimes.

'We don't know the full scope of anti-Muslim hate crimes and other hate crimes,' he said."
